ABSTRACT

This paper presents the results of a study of rust fungi (Uredinales) on wild and cultivated plants in the provinces of Catamarca, Jujuy, Salta and Tucumán that belong to the region known as Northwest Argentina. The rust fungi are represented by 635 collections on 257 host plant species belonging to 51 vascular plant families. These rusts constitute 182 species in 30 genera of which 61 are new records for Argentina and 10 are new species of rusts. Eighty-four of the collections represent new host records for Argentina, and 50 of these are new host records for rusts. Specimens have been deposited in either Fundación Miguel Lillo (LIL) or the U.S. National Fungus Collection (BPI).

RESUMEN

En el presente trabajo se presentan los resultados de la prospección de royas (Uredinales) realizada sobre la flora silvestre y cultivada de las Provincias de Catamarca, Jujuy, Salta, y Tucumán, pertenecientes a la región conocida como Noroeste Argentino. Como resultado de este trabajo se elaboraron 635 colecciones correspondientes a 51 familias de hospedantes (257 especies). Ochenta y cuatro de estas colecciones son nuevos hospedantes para Argentina, de las cuales 50 son nuevas citas como hospedantes para royas. Se identificaron 30 géneros y 182 especies de royas, de las cuales 61 son nuevos registros para el país y 10 nuevas especies. Las colecciones fueron depositadas en Fundación Miguel Lillo (LIL) y U.S. National Fungus Collection (BPI).

The fungi of Argentina have been studied by a number of mycologists, most notably Carlos Luigi Spegazzini (1858–1926) whose taxa were compiled into a comprehensive account by Farr (1973). Spegazzini's collections of rust fungi (Uredinales) as well as collections made by later mycologists were organized and studied by Lindquist (1982). Lindquist's studies resulted in numerous publications on rust fungi, culminating in his "Royas de la República Argentina y Zonas Limítrofes" (Lindquist 1982). Although the fungi of Argentina are relatively well known, the rust fungi of Northwest Argentina are less well studied because few mycologists collected rusts in that region.

In this paper we present a study of rust fungi collected on wild and cultivated plants in the provinces of Catamarca, Jujuy, Salta and Tucumán in Northwest Argentina. This subtropical region is characterized by climatic and biological diversity and consists of a plain in the east and the Cordillera de los Andes in the west where valleys closely alternate with mountains. The gradations in latitude and altitude in Northwest Argentina result in a mosaic of bioecosystems with vegetation types varying from desert to rain forest. The diversity of flora is reflected in the range of phytogeographical regions described for this area by Cabrera (1994). For these reasons, Northwest Argentina is an interesting and rich area for collecting rust fungi.

Lindquist (1982) documented 450 species representing 28 genera of rust fungi from throughout Argentina of which 124 species were reported from Northwest Argentina. Between 1993 and 1999 the authors collected and identified or re-examined 635 specimens of rust fungi representing 182 species in 30 genera. These rust specimens were collected on 257 host plant species from 51 plant families. Eighty-four of these host plants are new host records for Argentina, and 50 of these are new host records for rusts worldwide. Sixty-one rust species are reported for the first time from Argentina and 10 of these are new species. One of those, Baeodromus ranunculi J.R. Hern. & J.F. Hennen, has been described (Hernández 2000) and the remainder will be described elsewhere.

RESULTS

The rust species reported here are presented according to host family. This is the most useful form of organization because of the high level of host specificity of the rust fungi. Collections for each rust species are then listed alphabetically by host species followed by the province, details of locality, date, collector(s) and collector's number, herbarium number and rust stage present. For the rust stages symbols are used as follows: 0 = spermogonial stage, I = aecial stage, II = uredinial stage, and III = telial stage. The abbreviation "An" refers to the presence of an anamorph stage for which we are uncertain whether it is functionally an aecial or uredinial stage. Symbols representing spore types are X = amphispores, M = mesospores, and IV = basidiospores.

New rust records are indicated in superscript following the species name as follows: new rust species (N), new rust record for Argentina (A), Catamarca (C), Jujuy (J), Salta (S), and Tucumán (T). Superscript notations following host names indicate: new host plant genus for this rust worldwide (G), new host plant species for this rust worldwide (S), new host plant species for any rust in Argentina (A), and new host plant species for which another rust was previously known from Argentina (AR).

Abbreviations of authorities for plant host and fungal names follow Brummit and Powell (1992) and Kirk and Ansell (1992) respectively. Plant host names were verified using W3TROPICOS at the Missouri Botanical Garden.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The first author gratefully acknowledges his advisor and friend, L. Daniel Ploper, National University of Tucumán, who provided support in completing his doctoral thesis. Many thanks to María Magdalena Schiavone and her staff at the herbarium of the Fundación Miguel Lillo (LIL), San Miguel de Tucumán, Tucumán, who organized and accessioned many specimens, and to Alberto Slanis for host plant identifications. The efforts of Erin McCray and David F. Farr in providing accession numbers and assistance in the final publication, respectively, are appreciated as are the encouragement and efforts of Amy Y. Rossman that contributed to the completion of this paper. Finally, I would like to thank my wife, Mary E. Palm, for her invaluable motivation and support.
